Women's Lacrosse Players Lost Their College, Not Their Team

By ZACH SCHONBRUN, FEB. 23, 2017

OLD WESTBURY, N.Y. — Shortly after the email arrived — the dreaded email with the news they had been fretting about for weeks — a group text went out to the players on Dowling College's women's lacrosse team.

It had a picture of their coach, Kerri Handras, standing in front of a cerulean blue sign that read, "N.Y.I.T. women's lacrosse." Below it was a message: "Who's coming?"

The responses quickly flooded in. Yes, yes, yes, yes. Thirteen affirmatives. They were all coming. But wait, what is N.Y.I.T.?

It hardly mattered. For the Dowling players, Handras's text felt like a soft airbag after a high-speed collision. The email they had received at 5 p.m. on May 31 had informed them their college was closing, a jolt they had never truly believed was possible.

The team was less than a month removed from the best season in its history, finishing 17-4, ranked in the top 10 in the country, with its first-ever win in the N.C.A.A. tournament. Now every player was suddenly a free agent.

Handras was, too. After founding the program at Dowling, a Division II college on Long Island's South Shore, in 2005, she had won 115 of 154 games. Now she was jobless. But her primary concern was still her players.

"I couldn't help but think of them first," Handras said. "My husband said, 'We've got to figure out what's best for you!' But your heart breaks for them."

Among the first emails she received after the closing came from an address she did not immediately recognize. Gail Wasmus, a senior athletic administrator at New York Institute of Technology, another Division II institution about 40 minutes north, had an intriguing message. N.Y.I.T.'s former president, Edward Guiliano, had contemplated starting a women's lacrosse program for years to complement its championship-winning men's team. Maybe now was the time, and maybe Handras could be the first coach.

The next day, Handras met with the athletic director, Duane Bailey, who offered a wild proposal.

"What are the chances you can get your whole team over?" he asked.

Handras was floored. She did not want to wait to speak to players individually, and she did not want to seem as if she were applying pressure. So she casually fired off the picture message to the entire group, guessing at least a few of her players might be interested.

"I don't even think we spoke about it, to be honest," the senior attacker Karie Znaniecki said. "We just said, 'We're all coming.'"

There were still plenty of logistical hurdles. A new coach bringing along a few transfers has become commonplace in collegiate athletics. But an entire roster? It is believed to be unprecedented. The closest parallel might be when a professional franchise relocates to a new city. Though a handful of players sought out other options, a total of 13 from Dowling's final roster ultimately followed Handras. So did one player who had taken a year off, and two recruits who had committed to Dowling. Handras also brought along two of her assistant coaches.

"It's a pretty ambitious thing to absorb an entire team in one shot," Bailey said.

Bailey arranged for the players to take a tour of the campus before deciding if it was a fit for them. They all arrived together — players, coaches, parents, administrators, admissions personnel, academic support and compliance personnel — and traveled as a group. Many of the players were majoring in education, a program N.Y.I.T. does not offer, so they needed placement into compatible substitutes. For some, like Znaniecki, it will require an additional year to make up for credits lost in the transfer.

But, she said, the ability to stick together as a team overwhelmed any concerns she had about adding an extra year.

"I think the way we ended our season at Dowling, we were on a high," Znaniecki said. "We had such great team chemistry. We weren't ready to leave each other. It felt like we were graduating, but we weren't ready for that."

Handras moved into the women's basketball coach's office and tried to maintain consistency wherever possible. An easterly commute became a westerly commute. Evening practices became afternoon practices (N.Y.I.T. does not have a lighted field). Under Armour gear replaced Adidas, though during fall workouts the team was still wearing its Dowling jerseys, because the Bears' new uniforms had yet to arrive.

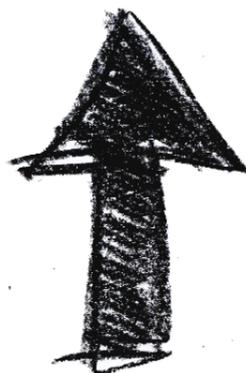

"People would ask us, 'Why are you wearing that?'" the senior goaltender Lauren Young said. "We'd be like: 'We don't have anything else. We're new here.'"

Slowly but surely, though, the players grew accustomed to shouting "Tech!" instead of "D.C.!" to break their huddles, even if those huddles still occasionally triggered déjà vu. Handras, who also coached the women's soccer team at Dowling, arranged for six of the players on that squad to join N.Y.I.T.'s soccer team. And scouting should not be an issue; N.Y.I.T. slid into the East Coast Conference slot vacated by Dowling's departure.

"From the worst situation, the best situation arose," she said. "The best possible outcome for us was being here."

The Bears will enter the season ranked No. 15 in the country by the coaches' association — a noteworthy placement, considering Saturday will be N.Y.I.T.'s first-ever game. But it also is a nod to Dowling, the team that vanished one day and reappeared, almost whole, on a new campus, as if everything and nothing had changed.

AS TOLD TO AMY WIMMER SCHWARB

We had heard for a couple of years that Dowling might close. But on the athletics side, we never really felt those fears. We were funded well. The programs were very successful. We were kind of our own little entity, and we were able to make things work on our end. Athletics never suffered.

Then, the week after graduation last year, rumors started circulating. Me, the players, everyone — we were like, is this really happening? The staff at Dowling — I'd been coaching with them for 12 years — were all devastated. It's almost like your co-workers are teammates, as well. You know those you can lean on, those you can talk to — an ear to speak to or a shoulder to lean on. They go through all the same things as you. I had a lot of friendships.

We all went down with the ship. Dowling shut the doors on May 31.

The next day, I was in a meeting with the New York Institute of Technology athletics director, who had already spoken to the president. They had been in talks for a while about adding women's lacrosse. They just weren't sure — it was something that just never came to fruition. So when I met with the AD the day after Dowling closed, it was just an opportune time for them to get a coach and possibly a team to come over. He had a proposal and offered me the job.

Of course, I thought immediately of my student-athletes, especially the nine seniors on my team at Dowling. I had to ask, what made sense for them? I wanted them to graduate on time, and who's going to accept all the credits they had earned?

They had the camaraderie. They had the chemistry. They bonded on the field and off the field. It just becomes a sisterhood, especially for the ones who had been there three or four years. It is blood, sweat and tears — and they did have a successful season last year. They didn't want to go to different schools and play with different student-athletes.

Almost as a joke, I sent out a group text to my players. It was a picture of an NYIT sign and the message, "Who's coming?" I got 13 "yesses": "Yes." "Yes, can't wait." "I love the new colors."

The parents, all the girls, the athletics director, the academic advisors — they sat down with everyone and really made sure this was a fit for everybody. I told them no hard feelings — I wanted, at the end of the day, what was best for each student-athlete. In the end, we had 13 from last year's roster transfer to NYIT, plus one returning Dowling student who had taken a year off. We also had two of our recruits come to NYIT.

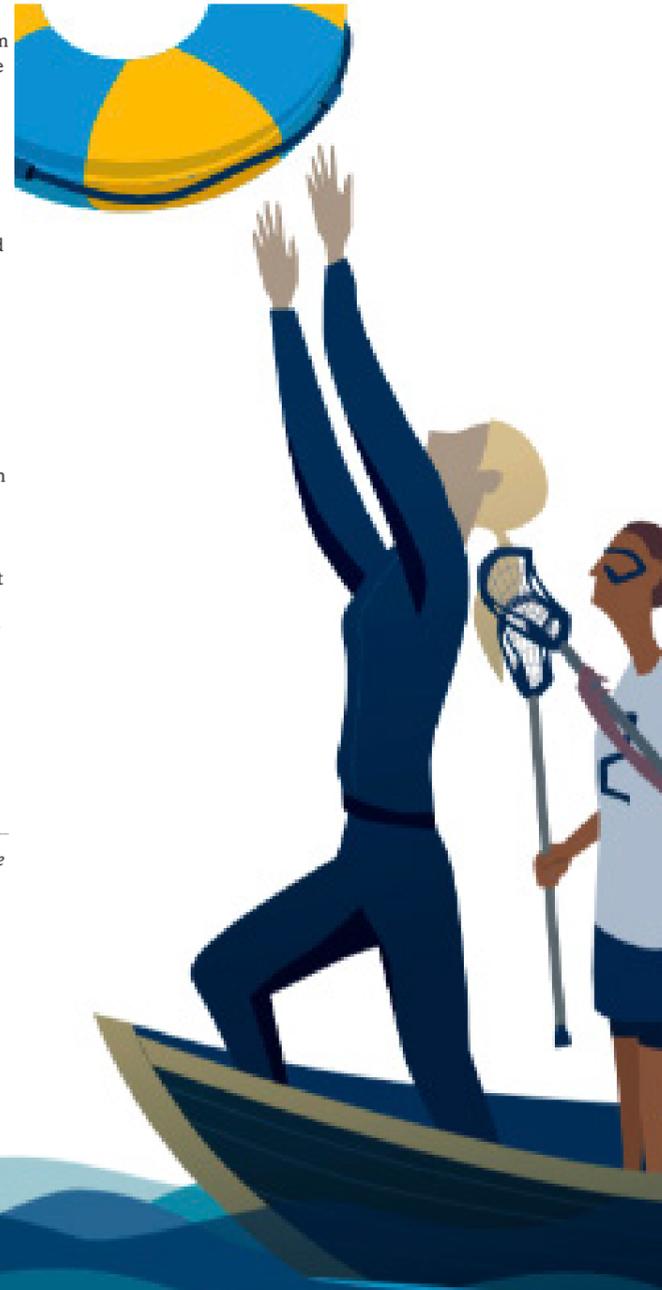

There was a lot of anxiety leading up to it, but it was a smooth transition academically and credits-wise. NYIT did accept almost everybody's credits, which alleviated a lot of stress for seniors trying to graduate on time. From a terrible situation, this was definitely a great outcome.

NYIT is in the same conference Dowling was — it just never had a lacrosse program. We played them in all the other sports. I took my Dowling schedule, and we just crossed out "Dowling" and put "NYIT."

Our biggest thing leading into this season is, "Who are we?" Who we are is NYIT. The Dowling Golden Lions' ghost lives on at NYIT. It does, in a sense, because that is our past, and I don't want the team to forget that. Our biggest thing is coming together as a team and mixing past players with new players and defining who NYIT is.

The game is the same. The name on the jerseys is different. We are appreciative of where we are. We were Adidas before, and now we're Under Armour. We were navy and white, and now we're blue. A different shade of blue, but still blue.

Kerri Handras is the founding women's lacrosse coach at the New York Institute of Technology and previously started the women's lacrosse program at Dowling, where she coached lacrosse and women's soccer for 12 years.
